

HARVARD UNIVERSITY PROGRAM FOR SENIOR EXECUTIVES IN NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL SECURITY

The two-week Program for Senior Executives in National and International Security is offered annually at the John F. Kennedy School of Government, at Harvard University in Cambridge, Massachusetts. The program provides senior officials with the opportunity to consider issues of national and international security with a broad spectrum of peers, and enhances their ability to work effectively and constructively with people from across the world whose orientations may differ from their own.

Who Should Attend

The program is designed for both US and foreign flag/general officers from the armed services and civilians of comparable levels from Defense, State, other government and non-government organizations concerned with foreign affairs and national security; including the intelligence community, committees of Congress and the private sector. Typically, participants are executives who make or influence strategic decisions within their organizations, or are called upon to implement major policies in the national security arena.

Program Highlights

- Emphasizes the importance of how one thinks not simply what one knows; and
- Designed to help people whose personal decisions and/or recommendations can critically affect the political, economic or military interests of the United States.

Offerings: Two-week session, once annually
